“We were literally Mayberry.” That’s how Southern University baseball coach Roger Cadore describes growing up in Ventress, La., the son of a sharecropper.

Cadore has fond memories growing up on the farm and attributes his success today to how he grew up.

“Summertime was when we got to be kids because we had already planted the crop to be harvested in August. We swam and played outside. We didn’t know there was a bigger world outside Ventress.”

As he reminisced over the “good times,” Cadore says his dad grew sugar cane, cotton and corn. They lived off what they grew in their garden – mustard greens, tomatoes, cabbage and beans. He says they also raised chickens and hogs. “That’s one of the reasons we ate so healthy because we grew everything.”

Cadore came from what was considered a small family. “There were three kids in our family. My sister, Betty, brother, Henry, and I was the baby. Everyone else had 10 - 12 kids. We were unique. At the time, I didn’t think anything of it. We had 40 acres we tended to and we made it happen even though everyone else had bigger families.”

But Cadore was not interested in staying on the farm. He wanted to go to school. “I didn’t get to school often until I was 14 because we had to make sure the crop was planted. You registered to go to school in August, but you just didn’t go until the winter months. People knew the situation in that part of the world, they knew you were working on the farm so you were socially promoted.”

At 14-years old, Cadore got his wish. “I got the courage to talk to my father and asked him to go to school full-time. I knew I wouldn’t do this for the rest of my life. He gave me the freedom to go to school.” Cadore added, “I had that desire to learn. People worked with me and I really worked hard because I did not want anyone to give me anything. I wanted to earn it. I met a lot of good people who wanted to lift me up.”

To this day, Cadore says he will forever be grateful for the support people gave him, but that does not mean he did not earn what we got. He took that work ethic he learned on the family farm to school.

“I learned tremendous discipline working on the farm. You got up at 5:00 a.m. to work in the field and then worked after school. For me, it required even more discipline because I did not want to work on the farm, but I needed to.” Despite as a child working in the fields,

Cadore says watching things grow in the garden gave him a lot of joy. “When you put a seed in the ground, cultivate it and watch it grow, it’s a beautiful thing.”

But Cadore’s dreams included getting his education. “I would get fussed at sometimes when I was picking cotton. I was too busy daydreaming. It’s okay to dream if you work to obtain that dream.”

Cadore’s challenge was learning how to read and write. He spoke creole in his formative years. He would run a mile and back every day to get a newspaper and I would read it front to back.

“I was little, undernourished, skinny and asthmatic. That’s why I would run. I knew I had to build my up stamina. My mother understood once I explained it to her.”

Because of his dreams of wanting an education, Cadore says people where he grew up looked at him a little differently and it was difficult, at times. “Discipline started a long time ago. I was different. I was the first to do certain things.”

Cador graduated from Rosenwald High School and was offered a baseball scholarship at Southern University. "Because communication was bad back then, the fall of '69 came and went without getting that scholarship. I still planned to go to college, and I was determined to pay my way. I picked pecans and worked as a handy man. I went to Southern to see what I needed to do to pay my way. That's when I met the athletic director. He said, 'Cador, you should be here.' I said, 'I never got my baseball scholarship.' He said, 'We have a basketball scholarship available. You can play baseball, but you have to play basketball, too.'"

Cador says he was not the best student but worked hard and surrounded himself with good people. There was no time for a social life, either. He knew he could not fail. He remembered how hard it was to live on the farm.

"I am where I am today because people have helped me. Don't think about yourself all the time. It will make you selfish. The greatest example is Jesus Christ."

Cador played outfield. He graduated from Southern in physical education and got drafted to play for the Atlanta Braves in the Triple A division. The year was 1973. He eventually met a young lady whom he married and decided family life was better than playing baseball. So he went to graduate school and got a master's degree in guidance counseling.

He was leaving to go to Greenville, South Carolina for a job when Southern University offered Cador a job as assistant coach for Southern's basketball team and head coach for the baseball team. Cador has been head baseball coach for the past 32 years.

"It seems like it was yesterday. I broke away from the status quo. My mother was happy to know I was doing what I loved and following my dreams. My dad got to see me coach at Southern. He was very proud and happy and he came to many, many games."

Cador openly discusses his respect for agriculture and its producers. "I have a lot of love and respect for agriculture because it's where I came from. Growing something is beneficial to many. You have to live on a farm to truly understand and appreciate it. Growing up that way is why I have made it. On the farm, the primary concern is not you. You have to take care of the plants and animals. They, in turn, will take care of you."

Cador says he frequents the farmers market because it makes him feel like he's back home. "There's nothing like fresh food. I will have my own garden again, one day."

During baseball season, Coach Cador has a televised baseball show that airs on Cox Cable in the Greater Baton Rouge Area, Lafayette and New Orleans.

Dick Walther posthumously honored by La. Legislature

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) family extends condolences to LDAF Animal Health and Food Safety Assistant Commissioner John Walther who lost his dear father, Dick Walther D.V.M., on March 25 at the age of 86. The late Walther was featured in the Oct. 30, 2014 issue of the Louisiana Market Bulletin entitled "The Charolais Caper." The issue is still available online at www.ldaf.state.la.us/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/MB-10-30.pdf

First ever LSU AgCenter 4-H & FFA state rabbit show

By Richard Bogren
LSU AgCenter

The first ever LSU AgCenter 4-H and FFA State Rabbit Show was held at the LSU AgCenter State Evacuation Shelter in Alexandria on April 30.

The show featured 117 exhibitors who entered 463 rabbits of 26 breeds. The show was judged by three American Rabbit Breeders Association-sanctioned judges, who judged the rabbits on ARBA weights and standards.

Chaeleigh Burnett, of Calcasieu Parish, won Best in Show with her Mini Lop doe. First reserve went to Jacob Fontenot, of Acadia Parish, with his Californian doe, and Destiny Bearden, of Union Parish, earned second reserve with her Florida White buck. Fontenot also won Best of Opposite with his New Zealand doe.

The Premier Exhibitor contest included 31 4-H'ers who participated based on knowledge and skills, which included showmanship, breed identification, feed ingredient identification, judging a class of rabbits and taking a test.

The showmanship competition included 45 4-H'ers who were scored on their ability to handle their rabbits.

Each contest comprised three divisions: Junior – 9 to 11 years old, Intermediate – 12 to 14 years old, and Senior, over 15 years old.

"The show was a success and a new opportunity for 4-H'ers in Louisiana," said Rodney Johnson, AgCenter agent in Rapides Parish. "We express our appreciation to the Cenla Rabbit Breeders Association for all their help and assistance in conducting the show."

"We normally don't jump into an event of this kind without a year of preparation and organization, but we felt that with the support we had we could conduct this event in year one," said Dwayne Nunez, leader of the AgCenter state livestock shows. "It was a huge success."
