Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., met with farmers impacted by the flooding as waters started to recede. Right, a bowl of flood damaged soybeans.

Agricultural industry hit hard by flooding

By Veronica Mosgrove

"I've never seen that much water come up so fast in that period of time," said Acadiana farmer Hugh Andre of HMC Farms. Andre and his two brothers farm approximately 7,500 acres of rice, soybeans and sugarcane in Iberia, Lafayette and St. Martin parishes.

On August 23, 2016, Andre described his flood situation. "Our sugarcane is still under five feet of water so I don't know the full impact," he added. Andre believes his crops are a total loss.

"The biggest thing that hurts the most is that this was the best cane and bean crop in 20 years and it's ruined. Rice yields were also really good. It's a loss," he said.

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., met with farmers impacted by the flooding as waters started to recede. At the time of this publication, meetings were scheduled in Batchelor, Crowley, Donaldsonville, Kaplan and Opelousas. Hundreds of farmers attended.

"These meetings are helpful because it gives you direction," said Andre.

"Please keep very good records. Keep every receipt and document with photos. Contact your Farm Service Agency (FSA) representative within 15 days after the devastation and your crop insurance agent," said Strain. FSA is the lead agency for disaster relief.

"If you have anything that needs to be recorded, you need to come into your local FSA office and record it. If you have failed acres that you cannot harvest, it is recommended that you report it," said FSA Executive Director Craig McCain.

Preliminary numbers obtained from LSU AgCenter economist Dr. Kurt Guidry indicate $110 million in agricultural damages as a result of August's historic flooding. Soybeans and rice seemed to be the hardest hit with economic impacts estimated at $46 and $33 million.

"There will be damage and loss especially on soybeans that were ready for harvest. Most of the current soybean crop was not ready for harvest, so potential damage is not yet known," said Strain. "Rice not harvested yet will suffer losses from reduced quality and weight. Also, many rice farmers will not be able to produce a second crop of rice because of rutted fields. As for sugarcane, farmers may lose some of the cane that was just planted for next year's crop." Strain added the impact on crawfish will not be determined until next year when production is documented.

LDAF launches GoFundMe Donation Page

Baton Rouge, La. (August 18, 2016) – Devastating flooding has impacted multiple parishes in Louisiana. Donations are needed to assist the animal relief efforts underway by the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) and parish governments. The funds collected will be used to provide supplies and equipment necessary to care for numerous pets and livestock in shelters operated by the LDAF and parish governments.

“One of the many lessons learned during Hurricane Katrina in 2005 is that many people would not leave their family pets to get out of harm’s way. Our job is to provide shelter and care for pets and livestock, when needed, so Louisiana residents can have comfort in knowing their pets are safe and being cared for,” said Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M.

Strain said he'll be traveling to Washington, D.C. to fight for funding for Louisiana farmers affected by the flooding. With flooded pastures, loss of equipment and damaged fences, infrastructure costs will also be factored in. "We have to look at what it will take to put land back into production," said Strain.

For farmers like Andre, his loss in sales could reach up to $1 million. "Problem is – it keeps raining. We cannot harvest. It's going to be a challenge just to get back to zero," said Andre.

Strain said the focus now is to "stand-up" farmers by eliminating red tape, obtain adequate funding for all USDA loan and grant programs, improve the state's drainage systems to help combat the deluge of rain that has caused flooding statewide over the past year.

As for Andre, he said all they can do is keep on moving forward and try to save what they can.

"This is farming. There's no back-up plan. Mother Nature can either be your best friend or your worst enemy. It's going to be tough for a lot of people."

Rice, soybeans take hit from recent flooding

Sprouted rice. Photo by Ken Lyon near Roberts Cove in Acadia Parish. If rice has sprouted in the field, it needs to be harvested as soon as possible and sent to the drier. Typically, this rice will be discounted for water damage and stain.

(08/26/16) PORT BARRE, La. – This is Samuel Buller's first year to farm on his own, and the 21-year-old was looking at a good rice crop. But recent flooding changed that.

Buller's yields are reduced, grain quality will suffer, and about a third of the plants in a 280-acre field fell over and sprouted. "It was some of my best looking rice," he said.

Buller was able to get back on the combine on Aug. 24 and harvest the rice that wasn't sprouting. Of the rice that can be cut, he said, the yield is ranging from 38 to 40 barrels an acre.

He doesn't plan to have much of a second crop. "We're just going to lick our wounds and hope for a better crop next year," he said.

There is a bright spot for Buller, however.

"All my soybeans look good," he said. "They're on higher ground."

Many other rice farmers are in the same boat as Buller with recent flooding that ruined considerable acreage for Louisiana rice and soybean farmers. The LSU AgCenter estimates that rice will be affected, with $34 million in losses, and soybean damage adds another $46 million to the $110 million total of agricultural losses from high water.

Rice that has sprouted could still be sold if it has not developed leaves like Buller's, although it would not be acceptable for packaged rice. "There are other markets for it," said AgCenter rice specialist Dustin Harrell.

Samples would have to be taken to a mill to determine if it can be used, he said, and sprouted rice would have to be kept separate from normal rice.

As much as 25 percent of the unharvested rice could be lost, Harrell said. Louisiana has 430,000 acres of rice this year. About three-fourths of the crop in south Louisiana has been cut, and harvest is just starting in north Louisiana.

Jeffrey Sylvester, of Whiteville, said 2 inches of rain on Aug. 22 added to his problems. "I had to build a levee on top of a road, and a field still flooded," he said. "The water stopped just below the heads" of the rice plants.

Sylvester expects half of his 400 acres of soybeans will be a total loss.

Vince Deshotel, LSU AgCenter county agent in St. Landry Parish, said only 30 to 40 percent of the parish's 24,000 acres of rice was harvested. Much of the remaining rice will be reduced in quality or written off as a loss, he said.

Farmer Charlie Fontenot resumed cutting his rice crop Aug. 24 in St. Landry Parish, but he realizes his crop will suffer with a reduction in yield and quality. "It's definitely going to be a yield loss," he said.

Before the flood, Fontenot's yield was around 46 barrels, but it has since fallen, he said.

"Our major loss is going to be the soybeans," he said. Several of his soybean fields will be a total loss after remaining flooded for several days.

Richard Duhon, of Maurice, grows 1,200 acres of soybeans along with 2,700 acres of sugarcane. Several soybean fields were submerged, and now Duhon is left thinking what might have resulted from the soybean plants that are loaded with pods of developing beans.

"I think it would have been one of the best bean crops we ever had," he said.

AgCenter soybean specialist Ron Levy agreed. He "had a tremendous crop," Levy said.

Floodwaters prevent the plant roots from getting air, then as the water drops, the water heats and scalds the roots, he said.

Soybeans are in the final growth stages, with the start of harvest about three weeks away for most south Louisiana farmers.

Soybean plants can survive two to three days of flooding. But even after the water recedes, soybeans are still threatened, Levy said. Waterlogged soil can cause plants to die because roots are sealed from getting air, suffocating the plants.

AgCenter yield estimate is certain to increase for Louisiana's 1.2 million acres of soybeans, Levy said. The current estimate is $46 million in losses. "Until the crop is harvested, we won't know what the losses will be," he said.

The forecast for more rain is likely to affect grain quality.

Heavy rains in north Louisiana also are damaging soybeans there, Levy said.

Christian Richard, of Indian Bayou, said he hadn't been able to assess the potential losses on his rice and soybean farm. "I don't really know because I had a lot of fields I couldn't get to," he said.

Adler Stelly, of Vermilion Parish, said his crop is underwater again. It was flooded the first time shortly after planting. Of 800 acres, he estimated that flooding has submerged 500 acres, and he said the outlook is not good for grain quality.

"It's got every kind of disease you can think of. It's going to be tough," Stelly said.

Stelly, who also runs a shrimping business, said the floodwaters have pushed shrimp out of Vermilion Bay. He's also worried about the effects on his crawfish crop because of stagnant water that is receding slowly.

Stelly had helped evacuate 150 head of cattle in Pecan Island, including some of his own. "We've got a mess, no matter how you look at it," he said.
