LDAF Seed Testing Lab adds David Johnston to team

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry Seed Testing Laboratory recently added Registered Seed Technologist (RST) David Johnston to its team.

Johnston said when he saw the seed program coordinator position become available he was excited for the opportunity to become a part of the team working at Louisiana's State Seed Lab with a great group of people.

"I've been in seed testing for over 30 years – with 25 years working in state seed regulatory labs in Missouri and Michigan," said Johnston. "Those labs are very much like this one where you do a broad diversity of crops and species with a very strong service-testing program for the industry." Johnston most recently held a position as the RST/quality control analyst for the Monsanto Vegetable Seed division.

Seed Programs Director Lester Cannon said he tapped Johnston for more reasons than his extensive experience in the seed-testing field.

He said the Association of Official Seed Analysts will soon require member labs to have either a certified-seed analyst (CSA) or a RST on staff in order to maintain accreditation and remain on the cutting edge of seed testing.

Johnston holds both of these accreditations.

"In order to maintain and elevate our seed-testing program, we needed to add a certified-seed analyst or a registered-seed technologist like David to our team," Cannon said. "With David's vegetable experience, we intend to grow our vegetable testing as it is very

Louisiana Ag & Forestry in National Spotlight in # 2017

Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., will lead the nation's agriculture and forestry bosses in 2017. With a new federal administration and Strain at the helm of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture (NASDA), Strain says he is optimistic the country's farmers will not be ignored. For Strain, it will be a very busy year working in different regions to ensure the needs of all ag and forestry producers are met.

"The bottom line is, my job as the head of the nation's agriculture commissioners is to increase trade and sell agriculture and forestry products worldwide," said Strain.

Strain said a 1.7 percent increase in worldwide trade is expected next year as opposed to the 2.8 percent that was expected. The decrease in trade is the result of new restrictions from countries across the globe.

Prior to the presidential inauguration, president-elect Donald Trump visited Louisiana three times. Strain expresses optimism working with Louisiana's congressional delegation such as Congressman Ralph Abraham, who represents the 5th District of Louisiana which includes Northeast and Central, Louisiana and parts of the five Florida parishes within the southern region and serves on the House Committee on Agriculture. Strain is also confident in his ability to work with Congressman Mike Conaway of Texas who is the House agriculture committee chairman. He says there will no doubt be great dialogue on trade and growth in trade.

In a recent visit for a "Get Out the Vote" rally, Trump told the crowd, "I love trade, but right now we have foolish trade," said Trump. "We will renegotiate trade deals. There's too much product dumping and currency manipulation. We don't want companies to leave our country, sell products and our people lose their jobs," the president-elect added.

"Every trade deal we negotiate helps farmers with their prices. Prices depend on supply and demand. Louisiana is a bulk commodity and export state. The majority of Louisiana production is consumed outside of our borders," said Strain.

Strain says he will push to craft a new Farm Bill that is business oriented and takes into consideration national disasters. "We need agriculture included in the Stafford Act or better provisions in the Farm Bill, especially for non-insurable agriculture and forestry," said Strain. Strain explained some crops cannot get insurance. A three year history on crops and its production value must exist. The Stafford Act is the disaster relief and emergency assistance law designed to bring an orderly means of federal and disaster assistance for state and local governments to aid citizens.

Strain said he will also work to remove punitive regulations that inhibit the economy such as Waters of the United States (WOTUS). WOTUS is a rule that over-reaches the Clean Water Act.

Strain adds that America also needs to understand and accept modern farming practices using science and technology as the population grows.

"What's going to be an uphill battle is that we've reached complacency with the affordability and availability of food. In 10 years, this discussion will be ever so relevant. Ten years is the timeframe for research and development," said Strain. "We cannot be apathetic. Failure is not an option."

La. Equine Council meeting set for Jan. 14 in Crowley

The Louisiana Equine Council (LEC) will host its Annual Meeting on Saturday, Jan. 14, 2017, at the Rice Arena in Crowley. This year's meeting will have a Working Ranch theme.

Participants are urged to arrive early enough to pay their dues and visit. The meeting will open at 10 a.m. with a brief business meeting, followed by educational demonstrations of ranch riding, ranch roping, and ranch sorting (demonstrators to be determined ahead of time). Morning events will end with a working cowdog demonstration by Bryan Boudreaux and Dan Landry.

After lunch, which is free to LEC members, the Ranch Relay event will be held. Contestants will ride a ranch obstacle course, rope a dummy, crack cups off a post with a bull whip, jump a log, go through thick brush, pull a load, head, heel, brand a steer, load a group of cattle and their horses in a trailer, and do it all in a timed event. Teams will consist of three people, with an entry fee of $100 per man (or woman). The teams can represent a named ranch, or not, and will compete for belt buckles and cash awards, with $500 added money for LEC members. Team members will decide who is on each team. As usual, a negative EIA (Coggins) test will be required for all horses entering the show grounds.

Teams will start out in a 50 foot round pen, with three horses loose and un-haltered. When the buzzer sounds, riders must catch, saddle and bridle their horses. When the last horse is saddled and the rider mounted, the first rider will leave the pen and begin the obstacle course. After he/she completes the course and touches the gate, the next rider goes through the gate and rides the course. When the last rider completes the pattern, three head of cattle will be released into the arena. One must be (mock) branded, then the team must load all three and their horses into a stock trailer. Riders may dismount to arrange panels to get the cattle into the trailer. Time stops when the last horse is loaded and the trailer gate is closed. Hot shots are not allowed to be used to load cattle or horses.

Team members must sign up by Jan. 10. A limit of six teams will be allowed. To sign up, send names of competitors, team or ranch name and a $100 check to La. Equine Council to Howard J. Cormier, 1373 Caffey Road, Rayne, La. 70578. (A registration form will be made available.)

Prospective La. Equine Council members may pay dues at the meeting and sign up for a $1 million insurance liability policy.

Asian ladybeetle showing up in Louisiana

LSU AgCenter Report

An invasive insect species could be making itself at home in your house, and an LSU AgCenter entomologist says the unwelcome guest is the variegated Asian ladybeetle.

"It is not a native species," LSU AgCenter entomologist Chris Carlton said. "In Louisiana, we have at least 75 species of ladybugs, and most are native."

This particular ladybug came to Louisiana in 1988, possibly from a shipping container. "No one really knows how it got here," he said.

By the early 1990s, Carlton said, the species was found throughout the U.S., and it displaced many native ladybugs.

The invasive species has 30-40 different color variations, with and without spots.

Most ladybugs prefer natural habitats, but this one prefers man-made structures for overwintering shelter, he said.

So far, efforts to predict the ladybug populations have been futile. "We have an extremely hard time predicting numbers of insects from one year to the next," Carlton said.

And the occurrence is spotty. Carlton said he's only seen one in his house in Baton Rouge, but he came upon thousands north of Baton Rouge.

The insect can bite, although it has no stinger or venom. They bite using sharp mouth parts that are used to pierce the skin of aphids, their preferred prey.

"They're just probing," Carlton said. "It's like a microscopic needle prick."

The ladybugs are active in winter during warm spells and are adapted to cold winters.

Houses can be protected against the insects by sealing homes, Carlton said, but he can't recommend any chemical treatments.

Smashing the insects usually results in an unpleasant odor. Pest control companies could spray for the insect, but it's probably not justifiable, Carlton said. "It's not a harmful beast. It's just an annoyance."

Although it looks similar to the native ladybeetle, the variegated Asian ladybeetle is an invasive species that has become common throughout North America, and it often seeks shelter in homes in large numbers. Photo by Jong-Seok Park/Louisiana State Arthropod Museum important for our farmers, consumers and gardeners here."

Seed is one of the top input costs for growers and for this reason Cannon recommends seedsmen, farmers and backyard gardeners have their seed tested. Cannon said, "There tends to be a lot of hold over seed which is simply seed that was held over from the previous crop year. In Louisiana's climate, if you hold over seed, even in cold storage, it tends to lose the germination rate."

Johnston added, "With Louisiana's high temperatures and high humidity, seed quality can decline really quickly."

Nutritionists say forget fads, follow sensible advice

LSU AgCenter Report

BATON ROUGE, La. – If you are looking to get healthier in the New Year, you can find plenty of ways to go about it. It seems for every person resolving to lose weight or eat better, a different diet, food activist or blog promises great results.

Nutritionists with the LSU AgCenter caution consumers that much of the information available online, from friends or family, or in books and magazines may not contain the soundest advice.

Georgianna Tuuri, an associate professor of dietetics in the School of Nutrition and Food Sciences, said food myths abound, and it can be difficult for good information to compete with the bad, especially with the lack of trust consumers have in the food industry.

"Our food supply is the safest, more affordable and available than it's ever been, but people are so afraid of it," Tuuri said.

Tuuri said she and other nutritionists are seeing more and more consumers turn to fad diets that can be harmful. People tend to trust information from their friends or what they read on popular food blogs more than they trust scientific information.

Tuuri used the term "tribal shunning" to show how people, especially mothers, feel they need to follow information from their friends or risk being rejected by their community.

"You see this in terms of what moms will feed their children," she said. Mothers may be made to feel ashamed for feeding their children certain snacks or juices that can be part of a healthful diet.

"To some groups, shared values are more important than facts or technical expertise," she said.

Sandra May, a registered dietitian with the AgCenter, said current fad diets such as gluten-free and paleo diets lack important vitamins, nutrients and fiber.

"Sure, you may lose weight following the paleo diet, but you are eliminating food groups such as whole grains and legumes," May said. "And these diets usually aren't sustainable."

Another consideration is the human gut, which has evolved to process foods that paleo people didn't eat, she said, so there is no need to eat entirely in that manner. Unless you have celiac disease, there is no reason to take gluten out of your diet, May said.

Juicing or detoxing can also be dangerous, May said, especially for diabetics.

"Some detox supplements and teas act as laxatives. This can lead to mineral deficiencies and dehydration," May said.

A common mantra among food activists is don't eat anything you can't pronounce. Louise Wicker, director of the School of Nutrition and Food Sciences, said just because a word is hard to pronounce doesn't mean the product is unhealthy.

"When you break down the ingredients of a banana, it has many words that could be considered difficult to pronounce," Wicker said.

May reminds consumers there are no quick fixes to getting healthy. She recommends following the Dietary Guidelines for Americans and the U.S. Department of Agriculture MyPlate guide to healthful eating.

"These recommendations are based on scientific research, and if followed, can help consumers lose weight and live healthier," May said.

Consumers can follow May, Tuuri and other AgCenter nutritionists on Facebook and Twitter throughout the month of January when they will be dispelling popular food myths. Look for the hashtag #healthbites.
