

New crop of Louisiana Master Farmer graduates

Fourteen graduates of the Louisiana Master Farmer Program were recognized for their achievement at a luncheon on Jan. 12, 2017, at the Best Western in Alexandria. In addition to the 14 new program graduates, 11 individuals were also recognized for re-certification. The Louisiana Association of Conservation Districts (LACD) sponsored the luncheon.

This year's Louisiana Master Farmer graduates are: Charlie Fontenot, St. Landry Parish, J.D. Fontenot, Evangeline Parish, Scott Fontenot, Evangeline Parish, Tod Fontenot, Evangeline Parish, Keith McCallum, West Feliciana Parish, Ty Rogers, West Carroll Parish, George Shepherd, Madison Parish, Joshua Sonnier, Vermilion Parish, Horace Steve Theriot, Lafayette Parish, Roy Varnado, Acadia Parish, James Wicker, Union Parish, Bill Wild, Tim Wild, Jefferson Davis Parish and Jimmy Wilson, Morehouse Parish.

Re-certified: Shannon Dabavol, Jefferson Davis Parish, James Deshotel, Evangeline Parish, Ronald Hebert, Jr., Iberia Parish, Brian Howard, East Carroll Parish, Keith Howard, East Carroll Parish, Robbie Howard, East Carroll Parish, Jamie Howington, Madison Parish, Kenneth LaHaye, Evangeline Parish, Anthony Tony Rozas, Evangeline Parish, Danny Suggs, Claiborne Parish, Donovan Taves, East Carroll Parish.

East Carroll Parish farmer, Donavon Taves, was awarded the 2016 Outstanding Louisiana Master Farmer.

"We have all studied together, we all went to classes together and have gotten to know one another," Taves said. "There is really great comradery and to be considered by some to be doing well enough to receive this award is a tremendous honor."

The Master Farmer Program is a voluntary certification program where producers blend environmental stewardship, agricultural production techniques and farm management principles into their own operational plans in an effort to reduce the impact agricultural production has on Louisiana's environment.

LSU Vice President for Agriculture Bill Richardson said the partnership between the LSU AgCenter, Louisiana Farm Bureau, the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry, Louisiana Cattlemen's Association and Natural Resources Conservation Service is the reason the Louisiana Master Farmer Program is what it is today.

"This is truly a partnership. This is why this program is so successful," Richardson said. "We are going to continue to work together as a team in order to serve this state."

In order to earn the certification, producers must complete three phases.

Phase one consists of classroom instruction on environmental stewardship on water quality regulations, conservation practices and USDA conservation funding. Phase two requires attendance at model farm field days, which include on-farm viewing of implemented, commodity-specific conservation practices. In phase three, producers develop farm-specific conservation plans.

New Orleans Fair Grounds Racetrack under Quarantine

As of Jan. 12, 2017, the entire New Orleans Fair Grounds Racetrack facility was placed under quarantine by State Veterinarian Dr. Brent Robbins, D.V.M. This is the result of the spread of the Equine Herpes Virus (EHV).

“This quarantine is being implemented out of an abundance of caution as we work to contain the disease. While there has been restricted movement of horses at the racetrack, at this point, we cannot risk horses possibly leaving the Fair Grounds while some are still testing positive for the virus,” said Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M. “This quarantine is being done for the health and safety of all horses in the state and to protect the horse racing industry. This virus is highly contagious and we still have horses showing symptoms of illness. We must do everything possible to contain this virus and continue testing until all horses are cleared.”

As of Jan. 12, nine horses remain in isolation. Last month, a two-year-old thoroughbred gelding reportedly developed a fever and neurological signs and was humanely euthanized on Dec. 26, 2016. Nasal swab and blood tests were confirmed positive for Equine Herpes Virus-1 (EHV-1) neuropathogenic strain at the Louisiana Animal Disease Diagnostic Lab. While this virus is not transmissible to humans, it can be severe in horses, especially the neuropathogenic strain which is more likely to progress to the neurologic disease known as Equine Herpes Myeloencephalopathy (EHM). The virus is spread most commonly by direct horse-to-horse contact. It can also be spread through the air, contaminated equipment, clothing and hands.

Horses in barns not exposed to EHV-1 will be allowed to continue racing. Exposed horses under quarantine are monitored for at least 14 days and tested twice for EHV-1. Any horses that test positive for the disease, are placed in isolation for further observation and testing.

Sixty-five ship-in (day race) horses that were possibly exposed to an EHV-1 positive horse in the receiving barn have been traced, placed in isolation at undisclosed locations and are being tested.

The LDAF continues to closely work with the USDA Veterinary Services, Racing Commission, and Fair Grounds officials as well as horse owners and trainers.

Symptoms of the disease include fever, ocular or nasal discharge, limb swelling, abortion, and neurologic signs such as unsteady gait, urine dribbling, hind limb weakness, and inability to rise. There is no cure for the disease but symptoms may be treatable.

According to LDAF records, EHM was last detected at the racetrack in 2008.

Care for freeze-damaged plants

By Dan Gill
LSU AgCenter Horticulturist

Although winter temperatures in Louisiana are generally relatively mild, they are punctuated by periods of moderate to severe freezes. Freezing weather is often followed by extended periods when temperatures stay above freezing.

Prior to a major freeze, most gardeners will make an effort to protect tender tropical plants in their landscape. So what should be done for the landscape after a freezing episode is over? Here's some general information on what to do and not do.

Plants in pots

Any container plants that were brought inside for protection may be moved back to their location outside unless you intend to keep them inside all winter. If you will keep them inside, make sure they are close to windows and receive plenty of light. You cannot keep plants inside dark garages or storage sheds for extended periods of time. Plants must have light to create the food they need to live, and they will slowly starve if not provided enough light.

Covered plants

Many gardeners use a variety of covers to protect plants from freezing temperatures. Remove or vent clear plastic covers on plants to prevent excessive heat buildup if the next day is sunny and mild. The plastic will let in light and trap the heat, just like your car with the windows rolled up. You do not need to completely remove the cover if a freeze is expected again the next night. Plants covered with blankets, tarps, opaque plastic or fabric sheets may be left covered for several days without harming them, but eventually the cover will need to be removed so they can get light.

Pruning damaged plants

Even though you may see damage immediately, do not prune anything for a few days to a week after a freeze. It often takes several days for all damage to be apparent.

Damaged growth on herbaceous or non-woody plants, such as cannas, elephant ears, agapanthus, amaryllis, birds-of-paradise, begonias, impatiens, philodendron and gingers, may be pruned back to living tissue. This pruning is optional but does help keep the winter garden looking neat. Damaged tissue that is oozy, mushy, slimy and foul smelling should be removed. This decaying tissue is unhealthy for the plant.

Remove the damaged foliage from banana trees, but do not cut back the trunk unless you are sure it has been killed. It will look brown, feel mushy, be loose in the soil and bleed if punctured. If it's alive, allowing the trunk to remain increases the chances of fruit production next summer.

Dead leaves on woody tropical plants, such as hibiscus, croton, ixora, cassia, bougainvillea and copper plant, can be picked off to make things look neater. If you can clearly determine which branches are dead, you may prune them back. Try scratching the bark with your thumbnail. If the tissue underneath is green, it's still alive. If the tissue is tan or brown, the branch is dead. Start at the top and work your way down to see how far back the plant was killed.

This pruning is optional and will not help the plant deal with the damage. Generally, it's a better idea to delay hard pruning of woody plants until new growth begins in the spring. Then you can more accurately determine which parts have survived the winter and what is dead. Living parts will send out new growth.

Another group of plants that are generally severely damaged or killed by freezes are tender perennial bedding plants such as impatiens, wax begonias, pentas, blue daze, scaevola, periwinkle and coleus. Although it's nice when they make it through mild winters and provide another year of flowers in our landscape, we must remember these plants are not intended to be permanent.

If, or when, plants have been killed by sub-freezing temperatures, remove the dead plants from the bed and mulch the area to keep it looking neat. You could also prepare the bed and plant hardy cool-season bedding plants, such as pansies, dianthus, alyssum, snapdragons or many others, anytime now through early March for an outstanding display this spring.

Remember, there is still plenty of time to see additional – and possibly more severe – freezes before it's all over. Protect what you can when needed. Don't be too quick to dig up and remove tropical plants that have been severely damaged and appear to be dead. Sometimes, they may eventually resprout from the base of the plant or the roots in April or May. Despite what comes, remember that our climate encourages rapid growth and recovery.

If worse comes to worse and you do lose some of the tender plants and tropicals in your garden, don't think of it as a tragedy but as an opportunity. How many of us have filled every square inch of planting space in our gardens, reducing our chances to purchase and plant new types of plants we want to try? When the dead plants are removed, we will have open areas available. Think about that, and the loss might not seem so bad.
