"This bull is mean, but I love him!" exclaimed movie director Rodney Ray about one of the stars of his newest faith-based film. While Seven Dust the bull is a member of the cast of Ray's newest movie, he is also a star on the rodeo circuit and is currently ranked number five in the world by the Professional Bull Riders (PBR) organization. "I try to be authentic in every way when I'm making a film," added Ray.

This is Ray's fifth faith-based movie filmed in his hometown of Monroe, La. The film, called Cowboy and Indiana, was written, directed and produced by the Monroe native.

"It's all about a positive message," said Ray as we sat in the Monroe Civic Center arena as he was getting ready to film a bull riding scene.

Ray, who is a land surveyor by profession, started making films in 2008. "I only do faith-based films. I just try to keep it real. I typically do not have a large budget so I have to do a lot with a little, but I work to make it a quality production," he added. And having a mean bull in the movie is about as real as it gets.

The story line of Cowboy and Indiana is about a former champion bull rider named Tulsa who battled addiction. Indiana is a young African-American boy growing up in a tough and violent neighborhood. The lives of Tulsa and Indiana unexpectedly cross paths and the two develop an unlikely bond. Meanwhile, Tulsa prepares to take on a champion bull in the climactic "Million Dollar Challenge."

"We are living in a world with so much racial tension these days. We tend to hang out with people who are like us; but when you cross paths with someone who seems so different, you find out just how similar we are and how we can help each other," said Ray.

Ray said he chose the topic of bull riding because it brings excitement to the screen. When Ray reached out to members of the PBR organization, many signed on because of its message of redemption.

"He's an amazing storyteller and self-taught movie maker," said Ray's wife, Jill. "Faith-based means telling the world about Jesus Christ, even if it's telling it through a bull riding movie," she added. Jill made it a point that being changed through

LDAF accepting Specialty Crop Multi-State Program applications

Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) is accepting 2017 Specialty Crop Multi-State Program (SCMP) grant applications. The SCMP offers grants to project partners to solely enhance the competitiveness of specialty crops by funding collaborative, multi-state projects that address regional or national level specialty-crop issues including: food safety; plant pests and disease; research; crop-specific projects addressing common issues; and marketing and promotion. The program is funded through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Marketing Service (USDA-AMS).

"With this particular grant program, the application process is a little different," Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., said. "Only participating state departments of agriculture submit applications for multi-state partner projects to the USDA for consideration."

Multi-state partners are encouraged to develop projects that bring together teams to research and develop solutions to certain specialty-crop issues that cross state lines and address the needs of specialty crop growers.

Applications from multi-state partner projects must be submitted to the LDAF, a participating state, or any other participating state by 5 p.m. Eastern time, September 25, 2017. Applications received after this deadline will not be considered for funding. A complete list of participating states that can accept applications may be found at www.ams.usda.gov/services/grants/scmp/states-contacts.

Examples of project partners include but are not limited to, the following entities:

- Non-participating state departments of agriculture
- Participating State departments of agriculture, but only if they have more than an administrative role in the project
- State agencies such as state departments of public health, state departments of natural resources, etc.

- Tribes
- Land grant or state universities or colleges
- Specialty crop producer organizations
- Non-profit organizations
- Federal entities such as USDA agricultural research stations, and Agricultural Research Service research centers

The minimum project award is $250,000 and the maximum award amount is $1,000,000. SCMP projects must be completed within 3 years.

LDAF accepting organic cost-share rebate applications

Louisiana Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., said Louisiana agricultural producers and handlers who have either obtained or renewed USDA organic certification may qualify for reimbursement for their certification costs through a cost share rebate program.

The program will reimburse up to 75 percent of certification costs, or up to $750 per year per certification category.

The rebates are available to cover certification expenses incurred between October 1, 2016 and September 30, 2017.

"Earning the USDA Organic certification for an agricultural product has a number of benefits like adding value and consumer confidence; however, the certification can be a costly and lengthy process," Strain said.

Applications must be received by close of business (4:30 p.m.) Oct. 2, 2017.

The program is funded through USDA's Farm Service Agency (FSA).

The 2017 cost-share

application is available at www.LDAF.la.gov. Reimbursements will be on a first-come, first-served basis, based on receipt of the completed application packet, until available funding is exhausted.

For more information, contact Jeremy Hendrix at 225-952-8155.

Additional information is available from the USDA National Organic Program website at <http://www.ams.usda.gov/AMSV1.0/nop>

ones faith does not mean you have attained perfection. “Nothing is wrapped in a bow.”

Ray and his wife have spent many years giving back to their community by serving as mentors to those in need. They say as long as they are making a positive impact on people, they will continue this calling.

Ray says he maintained a “wholesome” movie set. That was also important for one of PBR’s founders Cody Lambert, who said he supported the film because of its faith-based message and the positive impact it can have on families who have ups and downs.

Lambert served as an adviser on the film and also portrayed himself in the movie.

“I fed my family on the PBR circuit. If I did not do well, I did not get paid,” said Lambert who rode professionally for 17 years. He added, if he did not earn it, he did not want it. “It’s a job that is based on how you produce,” said Lambert.

Lambert knows that bull riding is exciting and a favorite event on the rodeo circuit. The combination of danger and adrenaline, plus the fact that it is not something everyone can do, draws a big crowd. “When you get on that bull, you’re on your own. It is not a team sport. You have to be 100 percent committed if you want to do well in this sport,” said Lambert. Justin McBride, J.W. Hart, Chris Shivers and some longtime bull fighters such as Frank Newsom are also a part of the film.

Keeping things local was also very important to Ray. “With the exception of our lead actors and the bull riding professionals, all of our hires are local,” said Ray. Between the beauty of Louisiana and the amount of support he gets from the area, Ray felt it necessary to stay home.

Ray’s company, R-Squared Productions, has produced other faith-based films which include: Mumbai Baby (short film), Desires of the Heart (short film), Flag of My Father, and New Hope.

Cowboy and Indiana is slated to be released in theatres in the spring of 2018. Ray added that is when viewers will be able to witness how a cowboy and a young boy from two different worlds come together to give each other strength and find Jesus and inner peace in the process.

Soil tests dig deep to improve plant health

LSU AgCenter Report

Every day, LSU AgCenter extension agents see failing plants, trees or grasses brought to them in search of a fix.

“The plant is just sitting there,” said Lee Rouse, LSU AgCenter horticulture agent in East Baton Rouge Parish. “It’s not growing. It’s not flowering. It’s not fruiting. It’s not performing some task it was meant to do. What is wrong?”

“Typically, the first question is, ‘Have you had a soil test?’” Rouse said.

Soil tests by the LSU AgCenter Soil Testing and Plant Analysis Lab on the LSU campus analyze the soil nutrient content and whether it is acidic or alkaline so experts can recommend any fertilizers and treatments needed to grow certain plants, trees or grasses.

The analysis can pinpoint the exact needs of the soil, Rouse said, so instead of treating plants with a general fertilizer that provides a broad range of nutrients, a gardener can use what is needed.

“You may need those nutrients,” Rouse said. “You may not. You just don’t know until you get a soil test.”

As summer ends, Rouse recommends testing soil in preparation for fall gardens and the tree and shrub planting season coming in December. Although some amendments added to the soil will become available to plants quickly, others need months. Elemental sulfur, for example, takes two to four months to become active, Rouse said.

“Now is a great time to get your soil tested,” Rouse said. “You have enough time to pull the tests, send them off and get the results and make the necessary changes.”

Soil tests can be completed in a week to 10 days. Sampling kits available at nursery retailers and parish extension offices across the state include everything needed to mail the test to the lab — an information form, three plastic bags for soil samples and a prepaid U.S. Postal Service shipping box. Routine tests cost $10 plus $6 in postage, which is paid to the lab.

On the soil test request form, clients list what they wish to grow in the soil being tested, and in return, they receive instructions on how to prepare for planting.

Soil samples that have been dried, ground and prepared for further testing at the LSU AgCenter Soil Testing and Plant Analysis Lab. Photo by Kyle Peveto/LSU AgCenter

Some of the samples sent to the lab will say something like “Can you tell me what’s good to grow in this soil?” said Michael Breithaupt, AgCenter Soil Testing and Plant Analysis Lab manager, who noted that the lab isn’t able to provide that level of analysis for each customer. “We want to know what you want to grow, and we will tell you what to amend for it,” he said.

While springtime between Mardi Gras and May might be the lab’s peak season, every day is busy, Breithaupt said.

On the first floor of Sturgis Hall at LSU, workers empty dozens of boxes onto a table in the back of the lab each morning and remove small plastic bags of soil. To begin testing, every sample is given a code and then sent through a dryer and a grinder.

Before the soil is analyzed with high-tech equipment like the pH analyzer and the spectrometer, lab technicians rub a bit of the dried, rewetted and ground soil between their fingers. Machines can’t quite replicate the sense of touch for the texture test, Breithaupt said.

Feeling the texture helps them recommend fertilizers to the client.

“Clay soil will hold onto the fertilizer, but sandy stuff will let it drain,” Breithaupt said.

Additional tests can delve deeper into other plant problems. An optional soil test can analyze the levels of salts, organic matter and a variety of elements in the soil. A water test can determine the mineral composition of irrigation water and its pH level, and a separate plant tissue test analyzes the stems, leaves and roots of a plant.

Last year the soil lab performed 18,005 soil tests for clients that included home gardeners, farmers, nurseries, turf growers and researchers. Hunters and game land managers growing food plots designed to attract deer account for the largest single group with at least 35 percent of the tests, Breithaupt said.

Once completed and sent to customers, routine reports from the lab give basic advice. For example, they may tell how many pounds of sulfur to add for every 100 square feet to a soil with a high pH so azaleas or other acid-loving shrubs can grow, or they might recommend three applications of potash to a field for alfalfa or a similar annual legume.

Each client’s local AgCenter extension office also receives a copy of the test results. AgCenter extension agents can help answer any questions about the tests, Rouse said.

“The best piece of information on a soil test is your county agent’s phone number,” Rouse said.

The Soil Testing and Plant Analysis Lab recommends these tips for collecting a soil sample:

- Dig straight down a few inches when gathering soil. Do not scoop. “You always want to get to the root zone,” Breithaupt said. “That is the top layer to the roots.”

- Get a soil sample every two to three acres on larger tracts of land. For flower beds in smaller lots, take samples from individual beds because the soil in each bed may differ. “When you are in the city, people bring in soil all the time,” Breithaupt said. “This flower bed might be totally different from this flower bed.”

- Samples must be free of any amendments — no fertilizers or lime. “Either one of those or both of them, your data is skewed,” Breithaupt said. Sometimes gardeners don’t realize that popular treatments, such as Miracle-Gro and Scott’s Turfbuilder Weed and Feed, are fertilizers, he said. If either has been applied recently, give it time. “Wait a few months and let it work its way through the system, then send it in,” he said.

- For each sample, combine two or three spots from the area you wish to be tested so oddities from one scoop of soil do not overly affect the test. “Take here, here and here and put it in a bucket, and that will combine that area,” Breithaupt said.

- Get plenty of soil. “There’s no such thing as too much sample,” Breithaupt said. “Fill those bags up.”
