

MarketReady coming to an area near you

Dr. Pamela Hodson discusses the importance of proper labeling and packaging. Hodson said labels should contain the farm name, logo, contact information, origin of the product best by or harvest date as well as handling and usage information.

By Laura Pursnell-Lindsay

Are you a small farmer and looking to branch out from the farmers market or roadside stand but unsure of what that will entail or where to begin?

With food safety, insurance, product quality and traceability requirements to consider, expanding into the restaurant, grocery and wholesale markets may seem like an unattainable undertaking.

To aid in overcoming these challenges, the LSU AgCenter is hosting a professional marketing education workshop series for small to medium scale produce farmers, cottage food producers and value-added producers to plan a successful business strategy.

The MarketReady workshop covers everything from choosing a label and packaging, Food Safety Modernization Act, better known as FSMA, to marketing and promoting your farm.

Dr. Carl Motsenbocker with the LSU AgCenter said communication and creating a personal connection with your customer is important to earn trust. Motsenbocker's suggestions include going to a farmers market where customers are interfacing directly with farmers, inviting customers to the farm to showcase your operation and processes so people will understand how you grow.

The highlight of the day was the MarketReady Buyer's Panel discussion featuring: Patrick Morris of Rouse's Market, Terrecia Bates-Wells of Capitol City Produce, Andre Gravens of Magpie Café, Blane Brignac with Farm Bureau Insurance and Crystal Robertson, Farm to School expert.

Patrick Morris of Rouse's Market offered a piece of advice to the attendees "Ask a bunch of questions of your potential customers, find out what is the next hot thing and always take the size of your farm into consideration."

The training program, MarketReady, will be offered May through July at various locations around Louisiana.

The MarketReady program is based on best business practices identified by buyers in these markets that are actively seeking local suppliers.

2018 MarketReady workshop dates:

May 22 – Oak Grove
May 24 – Shreveport
June 12 – Alexandria
June 14 – Lafayette
June 20 – Lake Charles
June 21 – Hammond
July 10 – New Orleans

Emergency Quarantine for Roseau Cane Scale

Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., has signed an emergency quarantine for Roseau cane scale. The scale, native to China and Japan, is an insect that destroys Roseau cane which is vegetation that helps protect Louisiana's coast.

According to the emergency declaration, Roseau cane scale poses a threat to the health and welfare of Louisiana's wetlands, and possibly sorghum, sugarcane and rice industries.

"Following an extensive survey conducted by the LSU AgCenter, it has been determined that efforts should be made to limit the spread of Roseau cane scale. Therefore, a quarantine is now in effect," said Strain.

Quarantine areas in the state include all areas south of Louisiana Highway 10 beginning at the Mississippi state line moving west until intersecting at Highway 171 in Vernon Parish. Also, moving south on Highway 171 to Highway 190 in DeRidder and turning west onto Highway 190 and continuing on Highway 190 until it reaches the Sabine River.

Quarantine areas in the state include portions of the following parishes south of Louisiana Highway 10: Allen, East Feliciana, Evangeline, Pointe Coupee, St. Landry, St. Helena, Tangipahoa, Vernon, Washington and West Feliciana.

These entire parishes are quarantined: Acadia, Ascension, Assumption, Beauregard, Calcasieu, Cameron, East Baton Rouge, Iberia, Iberville, Jefferson, Jefferson Davis, Lafayette, Lafourche, Livingston, Orleans, Plaquemines, St. Bernard, St.

Charles, St. James, St. John, St. Martin, St. Mary, St. Tammany, Terrebonne, Vermillion and West Baton Rouge.

Clean nursery stock may be moved within quarantined areas under a special permit issued by the LDAF. Limited movement of Roseau cane by boat is allowed by waterfowl hunters as long as the Roseau cane material is moved no more than one-quarter mile from its original location and remains within the quarantine area.

The quarantine went into effect March 26, 2018. It will be in effect until further notice.

AgCenter seed program supports sweet potato industry

Olivia McClure
LSU AgCenter

When Louisiana sweet potato farmers begin planting later this spring, many of them will use transplants grown from seed from the LSU AgCenter Foundation Seed Program.

The AgCenter annually produces 10,000 to 15,000 bushels of foundation seed — sweet potato roots that farmers use to sprout the “slips” they cut and transplant to grow their crop. Each batch of seed roots originates from about a dozen plants that have passed rigorous screening for viruses, mutations and other problems.

There’s no way to tell if the plants are totally virus-free. But scientists make sure there are no signs of a few key viruses that pose significant threats to yields.

“We test for the viruses that we know about and provide evidence that they’re not there,” said AgCenter plant pathologist Chris Clark.

The seed program began in 1934, and the virus testing component was added in 1999.

Plants to be used for foundation seed are checked for six viruses. Four are potyviruses, which are common on American sweet potato farms.

The other two are not normally found in the commercial sweet potato industry. But they are devastating, Clark said, causing 80- to 90-percent yield losses if they show up alongside the standard potyviruses.

“We think it’s important to provide the service of keeping potential problems out,” he said.

Plants that prove to be “clean” are stored in glass containers to keep them safe from virus vectors. Each fall, the clean plants are transferred to greenhouses at the AgCenter Sweet Potato Research Station in Chase, where they grow into the next crop of foundation seed.

Planting virus-tested seed doesn’t guarantee farmers won’t run into trouble during the growing season.

“But we’ve found that even despite the low levels of reinfection we get, the seed is much better quality than it would be if we were not doing anything,” Clark said.

Testing has improved in recent years, especially since the AgCenter joined the National Clean Plant Network as a “clean plant center” in 2015, Clark said. The organization, which includes other universities, works to maintain and distribute disease-free planting material for specialty crops.

The AgCenter Foundation Seed Program is part of a sweet potato group within the network. In addition to providing about $90,000 in funding to the AgCenter yearly, the network has helped sweet potato scientists from different states share information and develop protocols for more detailed virus testing.

“We can be more certain that if there were something there, we would catch it,” Clark said.

Clark, who is the chairman of the network’s sweet potato group, organized a meeting of the group in March in Louisiana. Members toured AgCenter facilities in Baton Rouge and Chase.

Two individuals recognized at Weights and Measures meeting

Two individuals were recognized recently for their work with the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry’s Division of Weights & Measures during a Weights and Measures meeting.

US Secret Service Resident Agent in Charge Lou Velez, who was recently promoted, was recognized for his diligence, professionalism as well as hard work to identify and reduce the number of skimming devices in fuel pumps in Louisiana has had huge impacts regarding protecting consumers. Velez has been a trusted friend of the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) regarding reducing fuel pump skimming devices. Velez’s service to the state of Louisiana and all its citizens are both valued and sincerely appreciated.

Oak Point Market owner, John Sumich, was also recognized for opening their doors to the LDAF by allowing filming of training videos. “I’m really impressed in the effort to improve Weights and Measures efficiency and the effort of this office,” Sumich said. “I hope that this spreads to other areas of government.”
