By Veronica Mosgrove

For third generation dairy farmer, Matt Travis, the aftermath of Hurricane Michael hit him hard.

“Our local Baptist association here in Kentwood went to cook for the hurricane victims in Florida. When they came back, they told us they did not even have clean water to cook with,” said Travis.

That is when he reached out to Kleinpeter Farms Dairy in Baton Rouge and asked to borrow one of their milk tankers. Kleinpeter said yes. Kentwood Co-op, which also came to the assistance of victims of 2017’s Hurricane Harvey in Texas, paid for the fuel for the tanker truck and for the water. Then Travis drove the tanker truck to Florida. What he saw made an even greater impact on him.

“I got there and got to looking at the area where I was and it was bad. Farms were torn up. Equipment was a mess,” said Travis. “The farmers needed hay. Plus, they were rebuilding fences to secure their cattle. One farmer in South Georgia was trying to get

2,000 cattle pinned up. There are no more fences,” said Travis.

As Louisiana farmers often do, Travis, his dad James and Nicky Smith donated hay and put it on a truck owned by Charlie Hurston who was going to make the delivery to Georgia. “These cows are hungry. We need to feed the cows,” said Hurston.

“We’ve been blessed. We have a good hay crop. We’re just glad we are able to help. It could have been us struggling in the aftermath of a hurricane,” added Travis.

Travis said his neighbors, who do not work in agriculture, have also stepped up by donating money to help pay for gasoline and lodging once the deliveries are made.

“It’s a team effort. There’s an old saying in farming – if I have a bale of hay, you have a bale of hay. You help out when you can. It’s the right thing to do,” said Travis.

Thanks for the helping hands

Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry's Minority Affairs and School Garden Director Jeremy Hendrix enlisted the help of students from Southern University's Agricultural Land Grant Campus to provide nutrient-rich compost and several extra pairs of hands to help out with the LDAF specialty-crop demonstration garden fall planting. The garden serves as a resource for school and community groups to learn more about gardening and Louisiana specialty crops. Students also had the opportunity to learn more about specialty crops and winter vegetables. The garden is located at the LDAF Headquarters in Baton Rouge. Pictured from left are Southern Ag Center Animal Science students Felton Derouen, Keandrys Dalton and Terrell Hills, (center) is Dr. Harold Mellieon, Jr., and Jeremy Hendrix.

Good times at the State Fair in Shreveport

This Grand Champion Market Steer shown by Grant Racca of Iowa FFA sold for a whopping $20,000.

The State Fair of Louisiana in Shreveport isn't just about carnival rides and funnel cakes as agriculture remains an important aspect of the annual fair including the annual livestock sale. This year Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., kicked off the FFA livestock sale encouraging folks to, "Bid high and bid often! All the money raised goes toward these young 4-H and FFA students and their education." Ultimately more than $375,000 was raised from the sale of 114 animals.

This little guy is three-years old showing his pig at the state fair.
