USDA issues final rule for animal disease traceability

Baton Rouge, La. (Dec. 20, 2012) – The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) today issued a final rule for animal disease traceability, and Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M. said state animal health officials are prepared to comply.

“The Office of Animal Health and Food Safety has worked for two years to beef up its capability to quickly respond to a livestock disease outbreak in anticipation of the USDA mandate,” Strain said. “Our new state of the art animal traceability system includes electronic data capture and a state managed database which was partially implemented in June.”

Strain said the new system creates a quick reference log which also provides LDAF officials another tool to track stolen or lost animals.

USDA officials said the rule is expected to be published in the January 2013 Federal Register and will become effective 60 days after publication.

Unless specifically exempted, the final rule applies only to livestock moving interstate.

At this time, beef cattle under 18 months of age, unless they are moved interstate for shows, exhibitions, rodeos, or recreational events, are exempt from the official identification requirement in this rule.

2012 Year in review

Despite setbacks such as this year’s drought in the Midwest and Hurricane Isaac, Louisiana farmers had a productive year. Many of the state’s major commodities saw record yields and historically high prices with export markets continuing to grow. The Louisiana agriculture industry’s estimated value was nearly $11 billion in 2011. With high prices and yields, that number is expected to increase in 2012 once it is calculated.

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) continues to streamline while maintaining vital services to the public:

Enhancements in technology include hand held computer devices which have increased the overall efficiency and abilities of field and office personnel. Those devices are used to regulate pesticides and weights and measures and will be used for livestock traceability.

In the timber industry, prices should continue to slowly increase as the economy recovers and the housing industry rebounds. The forestry division continues to develop innovative programs to combat forest fires and protect private and public properties.

In 2012, Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., was elected president of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture representing 17 states and territories. He continues to serve as President of the Southern United States Trade Association which markets commodities produced in the southern states worldwide. These positions further enable Louisiana’s voice to be heard on Capitol Hill.

Low river levels continue to be a threat. LDAF is working with the federal delegation to encourage the Army Corps of Engineers to dredge and maintain the nation’s waterways, ports, and inland locks, dams and infrastructure. The economy of Louisiana and all of America hinges on its ability to efficiently and economically move products domestically and abroad.

LDAF continues to work with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Environmental Quality, the Office of Soil and Water Conservation, and agriculture centers to assist farmers and ranchers to become more environmentally friendly. For example, the new Master Rice Grower program through the LSU AgCenter is an incentive based program which certifies that rice is grown in an environmentally sustainable fashion.

LDAF worked closely with the Department of Transportation and Development, Office of Public Safety, the Governor’s Office of Homeland Security and Emergency Preparedness, Department of Health and Hospitals, and many other agencies in the governor’s office on issues of commerce, health and safety, and disaster assistance during Hurricane Isaac. For example, LDAF provided fuel for emergency personnel, hospital and nursing home generators. Pet transportation was also provided in the evacuation process.

During the last legislative session, 21 bills were passed into law repealing old, antiquated provisions and enhancing LDAF’s ability to streamline and modernize the department.

“The changes, repeals and additions to agriculture laws will make the operations of the department more effective and responsive as we facilitate commerce and protect consumers. I am very appreciative of the continued good working relationship we have with the state legislature and especially the agricultural committees chaired by Senator Francis Thompson and Representative Andy Anders respectively,” said Strain.

The disaster provisions of the Farm Bill expired in September 2011 and has not been renewed. Congress just extended the farm bill for nine months, however there is still work to be done. We still need a five-year farm bill that includes disaster assistance. Commissioner Strain continues to appeal to Washington for assistance and push for the passage of a new farm bill.

“In 2013, we look forward to strong commodity prices and expanding markets. We value our farmers and their hard work. The goals of this department are to continue to develop and protect a safe, high quality food and fiber supply for Louisiana citizens. Also, we will continue to push for state and federal legislation to protect and enhance our ability to produce, transport and market our products,” said Strain.

Strain Responds to Congress' Farm Bill Extension

Baton Rouge, LA (January 2, 2013) – “While Congress worked on passing the fiscal cliff bill over the New Year holiday, those in the agricultural industry eagerly anticipated movement on the expired Farm Bill. A short-term extension of the bill blocks milk and bread prices from drastically increasing, but the state of the Farm Bill remains unfinished. Funding to many vital programs such as disaster assistance is suspended indefinitely. It is critical that we have a comprehensive, effective disaster program that pro-protects our farmers and ranchers from droughts, hurricanes, tornadoes and other natural disasters,” said Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M. “We must also restore research funding. Through agricultural research and development, America has led the world in innovation and productivity. Every public dollar spent on research and extension generates ten dollars in economic growth. If we are to double food production by 2030 to meet global population growth, America must invest in the science and technology of tomorrow.

“Conservation of our nation’s soil, water, and wetlands must also be a top priority. Sustainability of our ecosystem under continued pressure to produce more on less land with less water has never been more critical.

“On a positive note, the short-term extension suspends price support payments which would have required the United States Department of Agriculture to buy commodities such as milk and wheat at significantly higher prices than what the market currently supports. The measure will keep prices stable for the consumer, for now.

“The Farm Bill is now extended for only nine months as opposed to the five-year bill the Senate passed over the summer and which never went before the House for a vote. A more comprehensive bill is still needed. More changes are necessary to protect and facilitate commerce of the largest industry in America,” said Strain.

Food science lab attracts local, national companies

LSU AgCenter Report

Oysters and prunes may not have a lot in common, but in Subramaniam Sathivel's lab, these are two of the products chefs are working with to develop new foods for consumers. The LSU AgCenter food engineer specializes in cryopreservation and shelf stabilization of foods.

He is partnering with Motivati Seafoods in Houma to help them produce oyster-and-spinach ravioli.

"Last summer I sent them the product and sent instructions out to microwave it," Sathivel said.

A week later Sathivel got an email saying the company liked the product and wanted to modify it slightly for commercialization.

Motivati Seafoods corporate chef Jason Gilfour says Sathivel's research is allowing them to pursue new value-added products.

"It's enabled us to take our efforts a bit further with resources we wouldn't have otherwise," Gilfour said.

Motivati developed a high-pressure process for killing the bacteria vibrio vulnificus that can be found in raw oysters. Sathivel's help in freezing and packaging the product ensures it is fresh and safe to consume.

"We are using cryogenic freezing to reduce the vibrio content. Our studies show we pretty much bring down to zero level the vib-rio, so it is a pretty good, safe product," Sathivel said.

The product still needs a little tweaking, Gilfour said.

"We'll hold it at a frozen temperature. Then we'll bring it to the microwave, and we'll adjust times and moisture content so that we achieve that desired flavor profile and temperatures," he said.

Once development is complete, the ravioli would be available in the grocer's freezer as a convenient, microwavable food. Gilfour said this could be as soon as February.

Sathivel also is working with the company Sunsweet on flavor enhancement and shelf-life extension.

Mark Crowell, a culinologist who consults with Sunsweet, says Sathivel helped them develop a new process for reducing water activity in their product, which slows bacterial growth.

"This research opens up whole new markets for us," Crowell said. "The particular project we're doing now has application in cereal. And this ingredient heretofore was never in cereal because it didn't have the right characteristics."

Crowell flies in to Baton Rouge from Seattle to conduct his work because he says Sathivel's lab is equipped with the tools and brainpower to help his product development.

LDAF Livestock Brand Commission arrests two men in swine thefts

Baton Rouge, LA (January 2, 2013) – The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) Livestock Brand Commission, along with the Catahoula Parish Sheriff's Department, arrested two men in connection with the theft of at least two swine on private property in the community of Sandy Lake.

Twenty-six year old Chester Franklin of Jonesville and a 17-year old alleged accomplice were arrested and booked into the Catahoula Parish Jail December 31, 2012. They are charged with two counts of theft of livestock, one count of criminal trespassing and one count of aggravated cruelty to animals. The meat from one of the pigs was recovered and one animal was returned to its owner.

"For many people in the state of Louisiana, farming is their livelihood and the way they feed their families. The Brand Commission is charged with protecting their property and working closely with law enforcement to bring criminals to justice," said LDAF Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M.

If convicted, the suspects face jail time and/or a fine.
