Ag on parade

Ag Expo rolls in West Monroe

By Sam Irwin

More than 9,000 visitors attended the 2008 Ag Expo in West Monroe. Commissioner Mike Strain (left) was the keynote speaker at the opening luncheon. The most popular feature for kids was the AgCenter's Ag Alley petting zoo.

To paraphrase President Calvin Coolidge, the business of America is agribusiness.

The organizers of the North Louisiana Agri-Business Council Ag Expo 2008 believe this to be true.

"Our slogan is 'Agriculture: everybody's business,'" said Janet Rutledge, executive director for the Expo since 2004. "For 20 years we've put on this show but this is the first time we've had it at the Ike."

Rutledge is, of course, referring to the newish Ike Hamilton Exposition Center in West Monroe. "The Ike" is synonymous with northeast Louisiana and all things agricultural.

With attendance figures totaling more than 9,000 for the two-day event, Rutledge said the 2008 Ag Expo was a big success, partly because of the move to the Ike.

"The large equipment dealers liked it a whole lot," Rutledge said. "They were able to put all the large machines and tractors under one roof."

Dominating the southeast corner of the expo hall was Goldman Equipment's giant John Deere cotton picker.

"Our floor space was double," Rutledge said. "I don't think we would have been able to put the cotton picker in there last year."

The earliest Ag Expos in the late 1980s were quaint affairs with a county fair feel.

"Those early expos were held in the late summer and we had exhibitors selling jellies and quilts and stuff," Rutledge said.

That formula was successful, she said, but the Agri-Business board wanted to focus more on the agricultural technology aspect in recent years.

"It was larger than it is now but we had fewer ag exhibits," Rutledge said.

"We wanted it to go back to an ag show. The last two years it has showcased up-to-date modern agricultural techniques."

Most of the time farmers are ahead of the technology curve, according to Jeremy Perkins of Central Oil and Supply of Monroe, one of the exhibitors at the Expo.

Perkins said new clean air rules have forced diesel producers to replace the sulfur additive with bio-fuel made from soybeans, cottonseed or corn.

"We've been introducing bio-fuels for several years," Perkins said. "Government groups, school boards and cities are using alternative fuels because they provide increased mileage, cleaner emissions and economic benefits but the farmers are way ahead of the game."

Mike Bader of Bader AgCam Sales in Bastrop was demonstrating how costs for high-tech gadgets like cameras and Web-based monitoring devices have come down to incredibly affordable levels and can help producers check on valuable investments 24 hours a day.

"We were targeting farmers and their farm equipment," Bader said. "You can mount wireless cameras and monitors on or in combine cabs and grain carts to check fill levels. The combine driver can use the cameras to see what's on the side or in back of the combine."

"There are a lot of safety and efficiency benefits the cameras can provide."

Bader said he got plenty of sales leads from the 2008 Ag Expo and is definitely planning to participate next year.

To be sure, not all of the display space was devoted to high-tech equipment. Some of the exhibitors were right off the farm.

The LSU and Southern AgCenter Ag Alley mini farm was a definite child-pleasing attraction with baby ducks, chickens and other natural farm animals. Many of the animals were available to be petted, cooed over or adopted.

Volunteer Christina Frazier said she was helping her father, R.L. Frazier, the Madison Parish county agent with the baby animals.

"The AgCenter has put the Ag Alley together for several years now," the younger Frazier said. "We do it to let kids know where animals come from. So many kids these days are raised in the city and don't have the knowledge of where these animals come from."

No Ag Expo could be complete without a food demonstration.

Beverly Richards of Monroe demonstrated the Star Peeler, a Swiss-imported food slicer, dicer and cutter, with alarming dexterity.

"The Star Peeler is not sold in stores so we have to demonstrate," Richards said. "The Ag Expo is a good place to show it. We get a lot of leads here and a lot of re-orders. Farmers grow a lot of vegetables and they want the easiest way to cut them up."

Another low-tech exhibitor was horseman Jesse Williams' horse carriage business promotion.

Clad in black cowboy hat and overalls, Williams brought along his Belgian draft horse and protégé horse, a young Haflinger named Charlie.

Charlie bowed his head and pawed at the corral bars every time visitors passed his stall.

"He loves people," Williams declared.

With the colorful "We'll pull your party together" slogan, Williams employs a genuine Amish-built, horse-drawn wagon for weddings, birthday parties and funerals.

He said he was using the Expo to further the good will already generated by his years of cowboy ranching.

"We've always done well because we've had good exposure," Williams said. "Everybody knows Jesse Williams in north Louisiana and all over the world because we show cattle all over the country."

At 68, Williams said he still rides competitively in horse shows.

"I ride competition poles and barrels. Yes, sir, I still do. I'm 68; been doing it 64 years. I got a lot of miles on me," Williams said. "I've got 10,000 trophies in my trophy room."

In addition to the exhibitors mentioned, there were representatives from feed stores, tractor dealers, antique tractor clubs, lobbying organizations and the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry.

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner

The Ike Hamilton Exposition Center easily accommodated the size of Goldman Equipment's 2008 cotton picker and other large tractors and agricultural equipment.

Mike Strain had the ribbon cutting honors to open the Expo Jan. 18.

"I'm excited about the marketing possibilities for our Louisiana agricultural products," Strain said. "This Expo is one of the best places to spread the word about our great state."

Not everyone who visited the Expo was in the market to buy; some were there just for the experience.

Joe and Joyce Barnes, timber owners from Magee, Miss., were visiting their daughter and grandchildren in West Monroe.

With the grandkids clambering up and down the tractor and combine exhibits, the Barnes watched in quiet amusement.

"We come every year to the Expo with our grandchildren because they enjoy it," Joe Barnes said. So did 9,000 others.

Strain reaffirms commitment to boll weevil eradication

Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Mike Strain, D.V.M., reaffirmed his commitment to continuing the Boll Weevil Eradication Program recently.

"The Boll Weevil Eradication Program is a true Louisiana success story and it will continue. Although it is, in fact, facing a funding shortfall, we will go forward with the program," Strain said.

Strain instructed the eradication program's staff to manage it as efficiently and effectively as possible.

"We have a competent, experienced staff and I am confident in their ability to continue this program on the funds we have available," he added. "Cotton producers rely on the Boll Weevil Eradication Program and we will not let them down."

Since the inception of the Boll Weevil Eradication Program, cotton yields have increased pointing to the success of eliminating the costly pest. At the same time, cotton planted acreage has gone down as farmers turn to other crops, like corn, that deliver higher prices.

Louisiana cotton farmers pay a $6-per-acre assessment to help fund the program. As acreage decreases, so does the amount of money generated by the assessment. Harvested cotton acreage in 2006 was 630,000; in 2007 it is estimated that only 330,000 acres of cotton were harvested.

"The acreage numbers show why the funds are going down," Strain explained. "Add this to other projects the department's money is tied up in and you can see why the funds are not there for the program. But again, I am committing to the farmers, the program will not end. We will find the funding because it is too successful to shut down.

"I stress to everyone - the Boll Weevil Eradication Program will continue with greater efficiency and effectiveness."

Cotton yield for 2007 is estimated at 1,004 pounds per acre. This is an increase of 58 pounds per acre from 2006. It is the highest yield on record for the state. In 2006, Louisiana cotton production was valued at $357.5 million, trailing behind only forestry and sugarcane. In coming months, agriculture economists will release figures for 2007 revealing the impact of the reduction in acreage.

Judges select winning Arbor Day posters

Louisiana's winning Arbor Day poster is on its way to the national contest sponsored by the National Arbor Day Foundation and Toyota, according to Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain.

The top three winners were announced by Strain after a panel of judges scrutinized all entries from across the state. Devin LeBoeuf, a student at South Thibodaux Elementary in Thibodaux, won first place; Savannah Davis, a student at Pine Wood Elementary in DeRidder, second place; and Abigail Thomas, a student at Peabody Montessori Elementary in Alexandria, third place.

All poster entries were created based on the theme, "Trees are Terrific ... inside and out."

Strain said he was impressed by the talent of the state's fifth-grade artists and their knowledge of forestry.

"This year's entries are evidence of our young people's concern and understanding of the environment and the role forestry plays in sustaining it," Strain noted. "The Arbor Day poster contest generates awareness of agriculture and forestry issues in the elementary school setting and sparks creativity and interest in the state's most valuable agricultural crop. I am proud to see this level of excitement about forestry."

The winning posters are on display at the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry building in Baton Rouge through April.

The winning posters are on display at LDAF headquarters in Baton Rouge. Devin LeBoeuf of South Thibodaux Elementary School took home first place with this poster depicting the theme, "Trees are Terrific ... inside and out!" (above). Savannah Davis of Pine Wood Elementary School won second place (below).

For winning the contest, LeBoeuf will receive a $100 gift card from the Louisiana Forestry Association, a goody bag of prizes from the National Arbor Day Foundation, and a certificate and tree seedling from LDAF.

Both Davis and Thomas will get $50 and $25 gift cards, respectively, from the Louisiana Forestry Association. They also will receive other prizes from the National Arbor Day Foundation and LDAF.

The Arbor Day poster contest is open to all fifth-grade students in the state at their individual schools. Winners at the school level are then sent to the state contest and the state winner is sent to compete for the national title awarded later in the spring. The National Arbor Day Foundation and Toyota sponsor the contest in all 50 states.
