LDAF Animal Health and Food Safety has new tool to track cattle

By Sam Irwin

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., said state animal health officials implemented a new state of the art traceability system June 4 for livestock that will allow animal health officials to identify a single animal if foreign animal disease or terrorist attack threatens a state herd.

"The Office of Animal Health and Food Safety is beefing up the capability of the highly successful Livestock Brand Commission to build a foundation to trace livestock as animals moves through the food chain," Strain said. "The system protects and supports the Louisiana producer in the case of disease outbreak and creates a quick reference log to track stolen or lost animals. The information collected will be managed separately from any federal system"

Strain said the electronic livestock check-in system was tested at Dominique's Auction Stockyard in Baton Rouge.

"The United States Department of Agriculture has mandated that all states create a program to trace any animal entering interstate commerce," Strain said. "Our program collects the animal's identification, including metal eartag number, electronic eartag number, backtag, brand and other identifying information at the receiving dock of the stockyard.

Strain said the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) is using software and hardware from Fort Supply Technologies, a Utah and Wyoming-based company.

"Funding for the program came from a grant from Homeland Security," Strain said. "Homeland Security understands that the protection of our American food supply is vital."

Louisiana Agriculture & Forestry Today

Strain elected SASDA president

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., was chosen to serve as president of the Southern Association of State Departments of Agriculture (SASDA) at the organization's annual meeting June 14.

The post is a one-year term. "To serve as SASDA president will not only give me an opportunity to strengthen the southern states' agricultural impact to the nation, but Louisiana's as well," Strain said "Southern agricultural interests are poised to play a very important role in the future of American agriculture. We have the infrastructure, the resources and the knowledge to make a real impact on national and international agricultural policy."

In addition to Strain's election, Commissioner Matt Lohr of Virginia was elected vice president, Commissioner Gary Black of Georgia was chosen to serve as secretary and Commissioner John McMillan of Alabama will be the organization's treasurer for the upcoming year.

Strain said the Farm Bill, international trade, labor and food safety issues will be of particular importance to the organization

"The southern states want to maintain the funding levels of the Farm Bill," Strain said. "We share common goals in that regard and will be able to speak with one voice on the issues that represent southern agriculture.

"We're also all in agreement that public health and food safety are critical. It's very important that consumers know that they are purchasing the highest quality and safest food items possible. SASDA members are working together to institute traceability systems so that when there is a problem we can identify the source quickly.

"I feel honored that my fellow area commissioners of agriculture have confidence in me to represent this vital agricultural organization. I look forward to working with all of the southern agricultural interests during my term as president of SASDA.

SASDA is a regional arm of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture (NASDA). SASDA is comprised of top agriculture officials from Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Puerto Rico, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Virgin Islands and West Virginia.

Strain said when livestock are dropped off at the auction, the brand or health inspector uses an industrial hand-held computer to record the eartags, backtag, brand, sex, breed, color and owner information directly into the device and uploads the information to the official's laptop computer.

A metal or electronic eartag may be placed on the animal and that number is also recorded.

The collected information is managed solely by the LDAF. From this database, key information can be immediately researched on animals by any authorized state user from any computer through a secure log-in to the LDAF database, said John Walther, assistant commissioner of Animal Health and Food Safety.

"A state authorized user could look up information on any animal that might have been reported sick, missing or stolen," Walther said. "With this system, a potential problem could be resolved quickly. It also will minimize impact on a farm or ranch, their neighbors and livestock owners in any particular area in the event of a disease outbreak or contamination."

The state's new livestock tracking system also ties into an electronic certificate of veterinary inspection program (eCVI) called Vet-Sentry that will allow private veterinarians to produce an electronic health certificate to better facilitate interstate movement of livestock.

LDAF team completes emergency logistics training

Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M., said the Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) Emergency Program's incident management team completed another training session under the instruction of two nationally accredited logistics trainers.

"The LDAF logistics session completed advanced training taught by Tom Hamilton and Mike Lococo," Strain said. "Both men have plenty of experience with emergency response and have worked on many high profile recovery efforts."

Hamilton has worked on numerous emergency responses throughout the world including hurricanes, typhoons, floods and earthquakes.

Forestry He served as an Assistant Area Commander in New York during the 9-11 crisis and most recently was involved in the Deep Water Horizon oil spill as a subject matter expert in the logistics arena, Strain said.

Tom Hamilton

Lococo started his career as a firefighter assigned to the Tahoe National Forest and has been involved in the emergency management of numerous wildfire incidents in the West. He is certified as a National Incident Management System (NIMS) All-Hazard Instructor.

"The LDAF is committed to being the most highly trained emergency management team possible," Strain said. "Logistics is essential to managing any emergency response and I'm very proud of our team and their willingness to serve the public."

Diane Stacy, D.V.M., LDAF deputy director of emergency programs, said 24 Ag and Forestry employees from across the state were certified at the Type 3 and 4 levels of the emergency management system. The training was held in the LDAF's Veterans Memorial Auditorium June 11-15 in Baton Rouge.

"This is a big accomplishment for our logistics team," Stacy said. "We have one of the best qualified teams in the state."

incidents of a greater complexity than those typically experienced.

The training taught all-hazard competencies and behaviors for command, general staff and unit leader positions to deal with Type 3/Type 4 emergency incidents.

Type 3 incidents involve emer-
