Citrus canker is a bacterial disease that causes lesions on leaves, stems and fruit of citrus plants. Lesions have raised, brown, water-soaked margins, usually with a yellow halo. While the infected fruit is safe to eat, it is unsightly.

Horticulture representatives from the LDAF, United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) and LSU AgCenter were on hand to provide information about the disease at a recent meeting with citrus producers in Plaquemines Parish.

New citrus disease in Orleans Parish

By Veronica Mosgrove

Nine citrus trees in six locations in Orleans Parish (as of July 18) have tested positive for citrus canker, a bacterial disease that can be transferred by direct contact or wind-driven rain. So far, three of the trees have been removed from New Orleans City Park by park officials, one tree at Lakefront Airport was removed and a homeowner has agreed to remove a tree on private property. The tree removal is being done in an effort to keep the disease from spreading to other citrus plants.

"The goal is to ensure that it does not infect other plants and to be able to continue to sell Louisiana citrus products," said Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry (LDAF) Commissioner Mike Strain, D.V.M.

At a recent public meeting with citrus producers in Plaquemines Parish, horticulture representatives from the LDAF, United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) and LSU AgCenter were on hand to provide information about the disease.

The bacterial disease, which only affects citrus plants, was originally confirmed on a leaf sample collected from a sweet orange tree growing in City Park. A laboratory test confirming the disease was conducted by the USDA Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS). The disease is no threat to human health.

Dr. Raj Singh with the LSU AgCenter told the group this is the first report of citrus canker found in Louisiana since 1940. Back then, it was eradicated from all states where it was detected. However, the disease has been in Florida since 1995. "The disease is present in every citrus growing county in Florida. Louisiana is now the second state where the disease has been found," said Singh. The LDAF is conducting an ongoing survey with the USDA to detect any additional positive sites.

"The disease causes lesions on leaves, stems and fruit. Citrus canker causes leaves and fruit to drop prematurely. Eventually, trees will produce no fruit at all," said state entomologist Tad Hardy.

The strain of the disease now present in Louisiana originated in Southeast Asia. Horticulture officials say all citrus varieties are susceptible; it is highly contagious; causes symptoms on young, above ground plant parts; causes defoliation and pre-mature fruit drop; twig dieback, blemished fruits and tree decline.

By the same time last year, there were seven cases of WNV and 10 cases of EEE in horses.

Learn more about how to export La. seafood

A series of Exporting 101 courses on developing or expanding an export business will be offered to Louisiana companies focused on exporting Louisiana seafood, fish, crawfish, alligator, value-added products and associated supplies, commodities and equipment.

Congressman Charles W. Boustany, Jr., M.D., (R-South Louisiana) is encouraging folks to take advantage of the free course.

"By promoting the Louisiana Seafood Exporting 101 courses, we are expanding the footprint Louisiana makes on the rest of the world." Boustany continued, "These free courses will be offered across South Louisiana in conjunction with numerous economic development entities and industry leaders such as the LSU Agricultural Center. I encourage all local businesses interested in exporting Louisiana seafood abroad to take advantage of this opportunity to learn new strategies from our state's leading experts."

Donald van de Werken, Director of the U.S. Commercial Service Export Assistance Center in New Orleans said, "The growth in metro exports is not just about big companies."

"In fact, 98 percent of all U.S. exporters are small and medium-sized firms, and our office continues to focus on local businesses as they look to strengthen their bottom line by making new sales abroad. We're here to help businesses realize that potential."

Companies new to exporting or experienced exporters with employees needing export training are encouraged to sign up for the courses which are supported by Southwest Louisiana Economic Development Alliance, New Orleans U.S. Export Assistance Center, Le Centre International, South Louisiana Economic Council, Acadiana Economic Development Council, Louisiana Agricultural Center, Louisiana Seafood Promotion and Marketing Board, Louisiana Sea Grant, Louisiana Small Business Development Center, Southern U.S. Trade Association and the St. Bernard Chamber of Commerce and St. Bernard Economic Development Foundation.

Participants will learn techniques for developing an international business strategy while identifying the steps needed to find new consumers in foreign markets, export economics and breaking even, identifying potential overseas markets, assessing business and product readiness, promoting products in target markets, export logistics, methods of payment and legal considerations and regulatory requirements.

Courses will be held July 30 in Belle Chasse and July 31 in Chalmette from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m.

For more information or to register for the free export training course, contact Project Director Marisol Canedo at 504-722-7894 or via email mcanedo50@gmail.com.

Have You Sold Cattle on the Farm? If so, be sure you paid the $1.50 check-off. It`s The Law -- No One is Exempt!

The beef check-off law goes into effect every time cattle are sold. This includes purebred sales and private treaty sales on the farm. The law requires that you must collect the national, plus the 50 cents state check-off money during your sale. The 50 cents state check-off is now a Mandatory Collection as a result of Act 298 passed in the 1995 Louisiana legislature, but producers may request a refund of this amount only, by written request to the Louisiana Beef Industry Council.

The seller is also responsible under the law. The seller may collect and remit the $1.50 per head in a private treaty transaction. This is the best way to handle purebred sales. To avoid a late payment charge, money must be remitted by the 15th of the month following the sale. Penalties of up to $5,000 per transaction applies to violators. All sale transactions are subject to audit to insure compliance with the check-off law.

Please use the form below when submitting the collected check-off funds.

Beef Promotion and Research Program Private Treaty Sales Check-Off Investment Form

"Ultimately, the infected tree stops producing fruit," said Singh. "Lesions can appear within 10-14 days following infection under optimal conditions. Bacteria enter through natural openings or wounds. Conditions for growth are conducive between 68-86 degrees Fahrenheit, but can stay active in temperatures above and below those numbers," he added.

Officials explained the disease can be spread long distance as the result of wind and rain from a storm, or on something as simple as gardening tools, lawn equipment, and your very own hands. "What is most critical is that you do not move infected or exposed citrus plants or plant parts from one place to another," Singh said.

About 25 people attended the meeting. There were few questions although those asked ranged from how long has the disease been in the area to what is the life expectancy of a tree that shows signs of having the disease. Officials said they believed the disease has been in the area for at least eight months based on symptoms seen on infected trees, but it is difficult to say how long it takes for an infected tree to stop producing fruit. Factors such as tree variety, initial tree health, and environmental conditions play a role.

Officials shared these tips on how to prevent the spread of citrus canker:

- If symptoms are seen, notify the USDA or the LDAF. Do not take samples of the tree and risk moving infected or exposed citrus.
- Disinfect gardening tools and lawn equipment.
- Disinfect clothes and body.
- Only buy citrus plants from Louisiana certified nurseries.

The citrus industry is valued at between $10 million in the state. The USDA and the LDAF will continue to monitor citrus in Louisiana and take measures to dispose of infected trees to prevent spread of the disease.

Irrigate yards, landscapes, trees correctly during hot summer months

By Allen Owings
LSU AgCenter horticulturalist

As we reach the middle of summer in Louisiana, we need to keep in mind the importance of irrigating our landscape plants. When we irrigate, it is important to apply water needed and efficiently. In many cases, plants are commonly over-watered rather than under-watered.

Each year, the Irrigation Association names July "smart irrigation month."

Of the tremendous amounts of water applied to lawns, landscape beds and trees, much is never absorbed and used by the plants.

Some water is lost to runoff by being applied too rapidly, and some evaporates from exposed, unmulched soil. But the greatest waste of water is applying too much too often.

By simply using effective and efficient watering methods, you can cut irrigation requirements by 10 to 30 percent and increase landscape beauty and quality dramatically while at the same time saving water.

Correct watering is vital for developing and maintaining a landscape planting. Lack of water can cause a plant to wilt, dry up and die. Excessive water can cause root rot; the plant wilts because it is oxygen-starved and, consequently, is unable to absorb moisture. As a rule, plants can withstand moderate drought more easily than too much moisture. For this reason, it's important to water thoroughly yet allow the soil to become fairly dry between waterings.

Wilting is a condition brought about when plants' roots are unable to supply sufficient moisture to the stems and leaves. Wilting for short periods will not harm plants, but over a prolonged period, it will cause permanent damage. Sometimes a plant will wilt on a hot day because moisture is evaporating from the leaves faster than the roots can supply it. If the soil has ample moisture, the plant will absorb water in the evening to firm up the stems and leaves. When the leaves remain wilted the next morning, however, it's time to water.

Water established trees, shrubs and ground covers infrequently, yet thoroughly. In the absence of rain, most trees and shrubs benefit from a once-a-month thorough watering during the growing season. Remember, normal lawn watering is not necessarily a substitute for thorough tree and shrub watering.

The feeding root system of a tree or shrub is located within the top 12 to 18 inches of the soil and at the drip line of the plant. The drip line is the area directly below the outermost reaches of the branches. Apply water and fertilizer just inside and a little beyond the drip line, not at the trunk. An effective way to water trees and large shrubs is to simply place a slowly running hose on the ground at the drip line. Move the hose around the drip line as each area becomes saturated to a depth of 8 to 10 inches. For large trees, this watering technique may take several hours.

It's difficult to make broad recommendations about when to irrigate because of the tremendous variations in climatic conditions. But during an extended summer period without rain, newly planted trees and shrubs should be deeply watered once a week.

Allowing the soil surface to dry out somewhat between waterings encourages major root development at greater depths where soil moisture is highest. Plants watered frequently but lightly are more apt to develop roots close to the surface, making them more vulnerable to wilting. This generally happens with automatic overhead sprinkler systems designed only to moisten the surface and run for a short period each night.

Remember that environmental conditions are the primary factor affecting plant watering needs. Consider these other factors:

- During cool seasons, less watering is necessary because evaporation is slow from the leaves and soil.
- Water use under clear blue skies can be twice as high as use under cloudy conditions.
- The best time to water is in the morning or evening when air temperatures are lower than they are at mid-day. In the evening, wet foliage can encourage fungus or mildew, making plants unsightly and jeopardizing their health. Be prepared to control diseases if you irrigate at night.
- All trees and shrubs need more frequent watering from planting time until becoming well-rooted, which may take two growing seasons. Once established, water-efficient plants can then be weaned to tolerate less-frequent watering. Proper weaning develops deep roots and makes the plants more drought enduring.

Prevent the spread of citrus canker!

- Notify the USDA or the LDAF if symptoms are present. Do not take samples of the tree and risk moving infected or exposed citrus.
- Disinfect gardening tools and lawn equipment.
- Disinfect clothes and body.
- Only buy citrus plants from Louisiana certified nurseries.
